

"Pigs Only, Please"
By William Shakespig

In the hamlet of Pigsburg, there live nothing but swine, and to a few pigs here, that suited them fine.

Some pigs were incensed, you could tell by their frown, because a ewe of all things had moved into town.

Why, a ewe is no pig, a ewe is a sheep, like the ones that were lost by Little Bo Peep.

Ba-Ba Blacksheep was the name on her lease (she was aptly named after her pretty black fleece.)

"She's not one of us, she's an outsider," some pigs whispered as they tried to deride her.

"Let one sheep move in and you'll soon have a flock. Why, this time next year, they'll have the whole block."

So those bad-hearted pigs signed a petition, asking for Ba-Ba's immediate eviction.

But most of the swine, who were good pigs at heart, felt the case against Ba-Ba was wrong from the start.

Judge Judy Hamoody was the judge who'd preside at the trial to decide where this sheep could reside.

Ba-Ba's attorney flew in from the coast, the flamboyant and famous Johnnie Porkroast.

"I object, your honor, this case is a joke. Why, all we have here is a pig in a poke."

Most pigs in the court room cheered their approval; Judge Judy yelled "Order!" and threatend their removal.

"We all have a right, the pigs and the ewes, to live wherever we happen to choose.

With gavel apounding, Judge Judy decreed, "This case is dismissed," and Ba-Ba was freed.

Most pigs in this burg were proud and elated. Who could blame those pigs if they all celebrated.

They threw a pig feast that was fit for a glutton, with all kinds of food (except pork and mutton).

They danced some pig jigs and sang some ewe songs, and vowed then and there to all get along.

Though Ba-Ba is wooly and the pigs are all hide, they learned what matters most comes from inside.

The End
